Tell Us What You Want at the National Direct Instruction Conference!

Planning is underway for the 43rd National Direct Instruction Conference. The conference will be held July 24-28, 2017 in Eugene, Oregon. Each year educators from around the world come to hone their skills and increase their understanding of how best to teach the wide range of learners in today's classrooms. We will continue to offer program training, our popular institutes for administrators, coaches and staff development specialists as well as many informational sessions.

We would like to hear from the field what sessions you would find most useful and interesting. We can't guarantee that your idea will be used, but we will certainly look for trends among the suggestions. Participate in the short survey by clicking here. By participating in the survey, you will also be entering for a chance to win a tuition waiver for the conference, a $675.00 value!

There's Still Time to Register for the Direct Instruction Coaching Academy!

An effective coach will help DI teachers evolve from technicians to engineers of instruction. To help equip you to help others in this evolution, NIFDI is offering the popular Coaching Academy, Analyzing Data, Classroom Observations, and Providing Feedback, on November 17 & 18, in Columbus, Ohio. This two-day training, co-sponsored by McGraw-Hill Education, is designed for instructional coaches, peer coaches and others responsible for observing instruction and improving student performance.
